			Total	9,210

- Among the Koreans now in Vladivostok there are only approximately 300 who arrived in Vladivostok prior to the end of World War II. These 300 Koreans are considered Soviet citizens, but the Koreans who have arrived in Vladivostok since the end of the war are treated as immigrants and do not enjoy the rights and privileges of Soviet citizenship.
- In Vladivostok there are the following schools for Koreans:
 - Fricary Schools: There are three Korean orimary schools, each offering a basic eight year course for Morean children between the ages of eight and sixteen. Two of these schools have an enrollment of 310 students each; the third has an enrollment of 630. The total number of teachers in these three schools is thirty-six, twenty of whom are Russians and sixteen are Koreans.
 - Technical High Schools: There are three technical high schools for Koreans. One of these is a day school; the other two are night schools. All three schools offer courses in mining, industrial, electrical and civil engineering. The courses given in the day school are more comprehensive than those given in the night schools and take five years to complete. The length of the courses in the night school is three years. The night schools accept all Korean applicants sixteen years of age or older who are able to pass an entrance examination. The day school accepts only those Koreans sixteen years of age or older who have graduated from one of the three Korean primary schools in Vladivosto' and who are able to pass an entrance examination. Graduates of the day technical high school are eligible to enter a university. The total number of students in the two night schools is 475 and the total number of teachers is twenty-four, sixteen of whom are Russians and eight are Koreans. The day school has 500 students and a staff of thirty-five teachers, all of whom are Russians.

Trade Schools: There are now two trade schools offering day and night courses for all members of the Korean community. Another such school will be opened in the near future. Each of the two schools has 600 students and two Russian and sixteen Korean teachers. The majority of the students are gradu tes of primary schools in Korea. The length of the course in both schools is two years, the first year being devoted no tly to molitical training and Communist indoctrination.
